

Pact's Safeguarding Policy Explainer for Children and Young People

Pact is here to help the people you're visiting, their families, and their children.

We want to ensure that everyone we help is treated kindly and lives a safe, happy life. This is called "safeguarding."

Sometimes we might see that someone isn't safe. Their family might be having a hard time. They may be being hurt or treated unkindly. Or they might feel so sad they want to hurt themselves.

We make sure that everyone in Pact knows how to tell if a person might not be safe. We give all our Pact people training so they know how to help, who to tell and what they might need to write down.

If you don't feel safe, are worried about someone, or if someone has hurt you, you can tell a Pact person. We will listen to you, help you and decide what to do next.

Part of our job in safeguarding is that we can't keep secrets. So if we hear you are unsafe, we will have to help make you safe – which could include telling another trusted adult.

Everyone deserves to be happy and well looked after.
